

What My Vote Means To Me

President Abraham Lincoln once said, "The ballot is stronger than the bullet." This is a very significant quote because it helps us realize how important our vote really is. My vote is important to me for many different reasons. The main reason my vote is so important to me is because it lets me exercise my freedom. In this country everything is based upon freedom, and voting is a great way to exercise that freedom.

Another reason that my vote is so important to me is because it lets me know that I can make a difference in this world. People often think, "I'm just one person, how could I possibly make a difference?" If everybody thought this, our government would be corrupt, and the power to rule would just go to whoever has the most power. Anyone who wanted to be in the government could, as long as you had enough power. Another way that my vote is important to me is because people have died so I can vote. Many people have died fighting for this country and our freedom and part of that freedom is our ability to vote. When I think of voting I feel honored that those people fought for me so I could vote and have freedom.

In conclusion, my vote is very important to me. Some of the main reasons are, because it lets me exercise my freedom, it lets me make a difference in this world, and because of the many people that have died so that I can vote. This country would not be as strong as it is, if we didn't have the right and ability to vote. That is why my vote is so important to me.
